

Broadband over powerlines is a BAD idea. This is interfering in test environments with established bands legally operating for many years authorized by the FCC.

An engineering effort needs to happen, rather than marketing departments with lawyers running amock to get this effort pushed through without properly regarding the effects of other people using these effect bands.